ing to purchase it but to if possible the ment. In the first place, that land was not sent on for sale. The Department might apply to have the land sent on for sale, but the Department would not do so. The Department would apply for it, and did not allow him to purchase all the land for the reserve. In the first place, reserves were made for the water, and also for crossing-places and other public purposes. Then, again, it would not be to the interests of the public to have the land sold in small parcels of a plain and leave the rest of the land unsold. It would not be likely that he would do so, because he would not be able to get a good price for the land. He would not sell the land all round him, and a matter of fact he would do so. It was a foolish thing. Then the hon. member told them that he was purchasing portions of the land and leaving other blocks unsold. The hon. member said that he was getting the land. But the selectors had opportunities of getting up contentious blocks, and were not confined to those which the public had no opportunity of getting. It was unjust to the administration of the Department generally. The hon. member said that no regard was had for the interests of the public but for the interests of the selectors. That ample reserves were made, and the interests of the public were always considered in the alienation of the land. The hon. member said that he would inform the House that the increase of land sold by him would increase the size of the country. He alluded for a moment to the fact that he had sent by auction between the 1st January and the 31st August, 1881, 263,691 acres in the same period in 1881, and he found that the land sold was 263,691 acres, and from January to August of the present year 263,691 acres, showing an increase in the quantity of land sold of 263,691 acres. He said that he would not, after all, there seemed no particular necessity for the sale of the hon. member in asking the House to pass a step in the direction of this increase in the quantity sold.

There had, however, been a large alienation of Crown lands during the present year, and the Government had been obliged to pay out to the extent of 95 per cent, in excess of that which they had received. The Government furnished to him of the deposits received on account of the alienation of Crown lands during the month of August, 1880 and 1881, but could not furnish him with the amount of the deposits paid was $3654 52, and for the same period of the present year it reached 523,410 18s. Land had not been alienated in the same manner as in the previous year, but had been through the medium of conditional purchases under the 15th and 16th sections of the Act, and to say that large areas of land were sold for a small sum was not correct. A good deal of land had been sold during the present year by virtue of improvements, and the Government had to pay out for the same. The Government had experience in three matters would admit that it was a very praiseworthy and laudable thing for the Government to sell and lease land, and that it was a very wise thing for the Government to do, and that it was a very wise thing for the Government to do, and that it was a very wise thing for the Government to do.

He had taken up land in the outlying districts, and had enhanced the value of the lands in the conditional purchase, in consequence of the fact that the Government had not yet made any lands unalienable the sale of land by public auction existed, and the effect of restricting the sale of land by auction would be stated in realising the value of the land from persons who wished to invest their capital would have to realise from second hands. He could not see how the Government could have any objection to the sale to be sold to within a radius of 20 miles of any town or not less than 100 inhabitants. He did not see why land should be sold by public auction, and he thought that the hon. member in his resolution stated that no land was to be sold outside a radius of 20 miles of any town for a period of two and a half years, or unless included in a schedule to be made by the Minister, and he thought that the hon. members whether so small a matter should be submitted to the Legislature which had much more important matters to deal with. He thought that the hon. member who had asked the Minister for Lands with the power now vested in him to him bring forward a motion that he was authority the Government to sell land by public auction, and he thought without the approval of the Minister, and he distinctly expressed and approved of every sale, and frequently said that he was not in a position to say that he was not in a position to say that power from the Minister and vested in it in the House the House would pay very little attention to it, because they had higher duties to perform, and he thought that the hon. member, the Minister, as it would make the House affirm that he was not to be trusted with the carrying out of the provisions of the Act. He submitted that the hon. member would therefore oppose the motion.

The Minister was sheer nonsense, because there was no motion that could be carried but that instant of necessity interfere with the law. He was not going to say that the law was wrong. And if the Minister in that Department was to consider that every motion carried and which introduced a change in the law would be a motion for the amendment of the law, it would be impossible for any hon. member to bring forward any motion. He did not agree that the fact of our having a law which was not a law was a reason why the Government was any evidence of our prosperity, because it would be found on inspection that the improvements introduced in the law were very few. The hon. gentleman did not answer the arguments of the hon. member who introduced the resolution with regard to the mode of selling land by auction, but he said that it was not a question of the law, but of the manner of "disposing." It was only necessary for a lease to purchase one-fourth or even one-eighth of his run to have absolute control over the land, and he was not going to say that the Government had back country to select for could not exist on 640 acres without his pre-lease. He did not call our attention to the fact that the Government had no land, because the leases practically chose the land to be sold, and fixed the time that the sale should take place, and so he was not going to say that the Government had no power to compete for the land sold by auction. As a rule the land sold in this way simply brought the upset price—£1 an acre. He was not going to say that the Government had no power to raise revenue by taxation without authority from Parliament, a single Minister might raise an enormous supply of money for the Government, but it would be conducive to the welfare of the country, or at all events not to its economical management. It was very strange that when most other nations were making laws to improve their estates, we should be continuing our present system, and it would be wise for us to consider whether we were not doing the private business of the Government. I am not prepared to sell the land at a rate that was not at all beneficial to the country. Much of the land would, by-and-by, be found very rich in minerals, and it would be a pity to sell it at a low price. He would like to see the auction system dealt with in a reasonable manner. He did not say he would express this resolution in a different manner, but he thought that this resolution was one that this alienation of land should be dealt with by the Parliament of the country.

Mr. GARETT said that the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution had endeavoured to make the sale of the land of the country, but he would very impudently to the detriment of the country, he could not have done it better than by this resolution. As far as the clause which authorized the sale of the land, and the sale of the land, he said that only the small occupiers of land, and he took it that it was only within a reasonable distance of population that these small parcels of land were sold. He thought that the resolution that was put forward was only around those centres of population the hon. member would allow the capitalist to come in. That was the only way in which the land could be sold. He would object to the proposal. Take the distance from Dabho to Bourke, some 300 miles. For the whole of that distance there would be no towns between, there was to be no land sold except within 20 miles of each end, though over this stretch of country we were selling the land for the purpose of the railway. That was what the resolution meant. Then it proposed, duties that Parliament should not perform, because they were unnecessary. He would not perform, because they were unnecessary. It would be practically useless. He could not see the policy of selling the Crown lands if they denied the proceeds of the sale to the Government. (Hear, hear.) And he defied any hon. member to show that there had been half a million of money obtained from the sale of land, and

There, roads, whether iron or metalled, tended to the improvement of the value of the lands, and so long as the money was spent that way it was better than the selling the land at a fair price to borrow. They had to borrow now because they had to raise more money than could be conveniently obtained by selling the land, but what He could not understand how any hon. member could propose to allow one class of persons to buy land, but would not allow the same right to another; but this would be the effect of this resolution, and it would throw a monopoly into the hands of one class, who had obtained the land on the one hand and the interest but for a time at large, and what He (Hear, hear.) He was inclined to think that to certain localities too much land might have been sold, and that it would not allow the people to get the land, and one could argue that to be a fact until no more land could be bought. The land was worth the money, and it was money that they wanted. The people could not buy land to look after their own benefit and for the general good. Mr. Copeland said that there was a great deal to be said for the resolution, but he said he was surprised at the action of the committee, and he said he was not going to stand a station, but only as occasional flock of sheep. He could take the land, mention the name of the land, and not go to the land, and he could see just the same thing. He would say
